Judge-executive stops performing marriages

Gritton says gay wedding ruling has made issue too divisive

By Ben Carlson
News staff

Anderson County Judge-Executive Orbre Gritton confirmed last week that he will no longer perform marriages following the Supreme Court decision that legalized same-sex weddings in all 50 states.

Gritton, who is not statutorily required to perform marriages, said he has performed them since taking office in January but the ruling prompted him to stop.

"I did so before it became such a divisive issue," Gritton said in an email to The Anderson News. "It is my wish to serve my community and all of its citizens from a totally unbiased perspective, and I believe the only way to accomplish that is to not perform marriages at all."

"Any other stance on my part would likely result in a feeling of alienation for a segment of the citizenry and that should not be a position that I, as county judge-executive, place the members of my community in."

"All citizens of this community should know and feel that they are represented in the office of the county judge-executive fairly - just as they are. And, as this is not a mandated function of the office I hold, this is the best alternative for my community."

Gritton joins a growing list of judge-executives

Mom, daughter busted

Child, 2, at home when police arrest trio on methamphetamine charges

From staff reports

A Lawrenceburg mother and daughter were among three people charged last Wednesday afternoon with possession of methamphetamine, according to court documents.

Dusty L. Dizney, 42, and her daughter, Lauren Dizney, 19, of 419 East Court St. were each charged with first-degree possession of a controlled substance and possession of drug paraphernalia.

The third person, Anthony D. Simpson, 27, of 1241 Dennis Road, was charged with trafficking in a controlled substance and possession of drug paraphernalia.

All three were charged after police arrived at the residence during a welfare check being conducted by Social Services, according to the police report.

A 2-year-old child, who police reports indicate is Lauren Dizney's daughter, was at the residence at the time of their arrest.

Dusty Dizney was "passed out in her bed" when police arrived for the welfare check, according War is often more about destruction than creation, but sometimes war can forge together something that lasts for decades — friendship among soldiers.

Local Vietnam War veteran Terry Covington knows all too well the power of friendships, and said he has been fortunate enough to still be able to count on a few men he calls friends.

Business owner arrested for school kickbacks

Birdie Road man arraigned, waives extradition to Indiana

From staff reports

A Lawrenceburg man was arrested last Thursday for an alleged scheme that saw his business provide just over $115,000 in illicit kickbacks to a school official in Warsaw, Indiana, including a Harley-Davidson motorcycle, according to court documents and media reports.

Brian Stowers, 54, of 1381 Birdie Road, waived extradition during his arraignment Monday morning in Anderson District Court, where he was also arraigned on a charge of pos-to a report filed by Lawrenceburg police officer Clay Crouch.

Crouch reported finding methamphetamine and scales inside the residence. When he asked Dusty Dizney to show him her drugs, she lead him to a lower drawer in a bedroom that contained a small purse with three used needles and a small plastic baggie with a substantial amount of what she said was either meth or heroin, according to Crouch's report.

Dusty Dizney told police she used meth the previous night and has a drug problem, according to the report.

While officers searched the residence, they found a small white purse that Lauren Dizney said was hers, according to the report, which contained a meth pipe. Officers said the pipe had meth in it when it was found and that Lauren Dizney told them that she snorted meth.

Simpson told police that a shoebox found in a room where he was sleeping belonged to him, according to the report. The box contained scales and what Simpson told officers was meth.

Simpson reportedly told officers that he was recently kicked out of a residence and is homeless, according to the report. He reportedly told officers that he was trying to make money to pay off fines from previous criminal charges.

Simpson, the report said, had recent injection marks on his arms and told officers that he had been injecting meth.

All three were arraigned Monday morning in Anderson District Court.

across Kentucky who have opted out of performing marriage ceremonies, including those who hold the office in Jackson, Nelson and Pulaski counties.

In Hopkinsville, Judge-Executive Steve Tribble will continue performing ceremonies, as will Christian County Judge-Executive Steve Tribble, according to media reports.

"The easy thing to do would be to just stop performing marriages," Tribble is quoted by the Kentucky New Era. "The right thing to do is to treat everybody fairly and let God decide."

"If pastors wouldn't marry anyone unless they were without sin, there wouldn't ever be a wedding," he said.

Gritton made no reference to faith while explaining his decision, saying that he would rather focus on the duties he is statutorily required to perform.

"With the current community division on this issue, it is my opinion from a governmental standpoint only, that the performance of all marriages is better left to those in the judicial branch of government and, of course, those in the private sector," Gritton said.

Fiscal court magistrates can also perform marriages, but first need consent from the judge-executive. Although previous magistrates asked for and received that permission, no current magistrates have requested authorization.

The mayor's office does not perform marriages, according to City Clerk Robbie Hume.

Richardson of Lawrenceburg. "If [Gritton] wants to go by what God says, no, he shouldn't do them. But if he wants two people to be happy, then it shouldn't matter. It's their choice."

Kim Monroe of Lawrenceburg said she doesn't agree with the Supreme Court's decision on same-sex marriage but knows it's something that is much men and women to love women."

A woman who identified herself only as Beverly said she doesn't care about Gritton's decision but isn't surprised he's opted to stop performing marriages.

"I can only imagine how bad it would be if he did perform one," she said.

"This community's too conservative for that."

Reaction to Gritton's decision was mixed.

"The Bible says it's a sin," said Lawrenceburg resident John Boyatt. "I agree with him not doing them."

Covington was surprised over the Independence Day week when four of the men he served with in the Vietnam War decided to visit him at his Lawrenceburg home.

The men came from all over the country, making over 1,000-mile journeys to see him. Covington's friends carried with them old photographs, memories of the war and a strong bond of brotherhood.

Russell "Huck" Huckleberry had not seen Covington in 44 years and made the trip on his motorcycle from Phoenix, Arizona to see his old friend, braving the rainstorms on his way through Kentucky.

"It's important to get together and it's fun to see how everyone has changed," he said. "We are a lot bigger in the middle than we used to be."

Bob Kleinert, who drove from Salt Lake City, Utah said he made the trip because it was still important to look out for one another.

"We get sick and we call one another to see how we are doing," he said. "We stay in touch."

Art Krause, who drove from Wisconsin, said it was neat to look back on old photos and remember the times together during Vietnam.

"When you get older your memory goes and you can't remember as much," he said. "Or your brain has just blocked it out for you."

Covington, Huck, Kleinert and Krause were all in the same platoon in Vietnam where they were in charge of driving trucks filled with supplies to different areas of the country.

The friends were young men during the war and faced the challenges of war together.

"We saw some bad stuff," said Kleinert. "We were hungry and it was bad sometimes."

Some of their favorite memories of each other have little to do with war or their duties during their time in Vietnam.

In one of the lighter moments in Vietnam, young Terry Covington is photographed pretending to hit Russell Huckleberry over the head with a coffee can that had contained cookies. The cookies were sent to Huckleberry by his mother, and Covington and other soldiers in the platoon were hoping Huckleberry would share this treat. However, Huckleberry ate them all, prompting a response from Covington.

They spoke mostly about things that reminded them of home. Especially cookies that Huck managed to always hoard away in his bunk.

"They used to always be gathered around that tin," Huck laughed. "They were waiting for me to open then and share."

Krause said the guys would tease him about the letters he wrote to his high school sweetheart.

"The jokes on them, though," he said. "I married her and she became my wife. We were married up until she passed away a few months ago."

Covington said sharing was a way of life there, whether it was food or stories from home.

"And when we got to go home before some of the other guys," said Covington, "we would share again. We would leave stuff we had behind so that they could use it and survive."

Worrying about the man beside you never stopped, explained Huck.

"We keep up with each other and make sure we are doing OK. Some of us have medical problems because of the war and we are there for one another."

It's about the sacrifice, the veterans said.

friends stayed in touch all throughout the war through letters and then afterward.

Cox and Covington enlisted together, but Cox served in Germany.

"We worried about each other," said Cox. "We enlisted together, went through boot camp together. We went through it all together. We were friends in high school and we have been friends since then."

Krause said people could never understand the bond unless they have been through it.

"We covered each other's backs over there," Krause explained. "That kind of bond is a lifelong bond."

Covington said the friends have continued to be there for one another.

tion WNDU in Indiana.

According to the business' website, it is located on at 2013 Fortune Drive in Lawrenceburg. A phone number listed on that website was not in service as of Monday afternoon.

Stowers was allegedly providing kickbacks to Gregory Schroeder, the school district's former head of buildings and grounds.

Stowers was indicted in Indiana on charges that include corrupt business influence, bribery, official misconduct and theft. He was arrested by the Kentucky State Police at his residence last Thursday on a warrant out of Kosciusko County, Indiana.

The TV station reports that Schroeder personally received approximately $115,620 in illicit kickbacks, including the motorcycle, between 2006 and 2012.

Purchases from Continental Maintenance Specialties occurred annually from 2005 to 2014. It is estimated Schroeder over-purchased items from Continental Maintenance Specialties Inc. in the amount of $828,151.34.

The business' website says it is a local, family-owned business with more than 20 years of experience, and that it offers a wide variety of specialty chemicals for schools, hospitals, nursing homes, municipalities and universities.

Old paper not kind to Bourbon Trail

Column as I see 'em ... Did you know Lawrenceburg used to have two newspapers? Neither did I until I stumbled across the digital archive of a publication that existed around the turn of the last century oddly titled "It."

And let me tell you, "It" was a veritable hoot not only for its name but for some of the content "It" included.

From openly rooting for a tip on a local man's death to be true to a rather harsh reference to what we today call the Bourbon Trail, the paper was long on opinion and advertising and somewhat loose with what today would be considered facts.

An issue from Dec. 18, 1902, featured a news article headlined "Tom Allen Gets Properly Dehorned." In it, the paper receives a tip that Allen was killed in what appeared to be a drunken brawl, only to find out later that he survived.

"Were it true that the good die young, we would only remember Tom as an infant, for, if there ever was a good for nothing [N word] on earth, it was Tom Allen," the paper wrote.

"It" went on to describe the brawl, which featured a couple of local fellows tooling up on Tom with beer bottles outside of a saloon.

"Harry and Clarence Miller, who, with beer bottles as racquets and Tom's head as a ball, gave a very fine exhibition of ping-pong," the story says.

For their efforts, the Miller boys were each fined $25 by Judge Walker, along with costs.

With Christmas just around the corner, "It" was lousy with ads by local merchants, along with admonitions from the paper's editor about how to properly celebrate the holiday.

Beneath a half page ad for J.B. Black in Van Buren that promoted everything from groceries, harnesses, wagons and cloaks appeared a remarkably cutting diatribe about how some Kentuckians celebrated "Xmas," the paper's obvious attempt to take Christ out of the holiday ... I guess.

"In the Western States, Xmas day is the day of all days for the suspension of all business," the paper said. "The pulpit of every church is occupied upon that day to the most able ministers.

"In Kentucky, we build bonfires, fire cannons, fire anvils, have fireworks and fire-water, which bring on fire-arms that bring about a decrease in the population of the state."

Well! And some folks think I'm a little heavy-handed in my columns.

Interestingly enough, in a snippet about Baptist Sunday school on another page, Christ was back in Christmas in a short piece about the church's Christmas tree.

Hmm.

There was some good news printed, too. On another page we learn about John B. Willis Jr., a child from Tyrone (more on our river-dwelling friends in a moment) bitten by what the paper described as a "mad cat."

Not to fear. The boy was taken immediately to the home of Mr. S.O. Hackley, who applied the "mad stone" he owned to the injury. Following several applications of the "mad stone," the boy was thought to be out of danger.

Then there was news out of Ninevah, where three people participated in a banana-eating contest. The winner, Mr. Wood, was said to have "put away" 36 bananas in just 40 minutes.

An ad by Blue Grass Grocery said bananas back then sold for 15 cents a dozen, meaning Mr. Wood spent 45 cents to gorge himself.

There was also a poem about Tyrone, at that time a bustling marketplace that rivaled Lawrenceburg in size and offerings.

Given that the poem speaks very poorly about what one might find in Tyrone, my guess is that the unnamed author was likely a business owner in the city.

Here's how it goes:

We've often heard 'em say
In a jesting kind o' way
That 'Irishmen' neath the turnpikes are entombed.
If such the case be true,
We'd have given a dollar or two
To have seen the monster buried near Tyrone.
Should you wish to Tyrone drive,
And reach the place alive,
A good guide you'd better take along.
Else you'll strike that awful mound,
Get thrown out on the ground,
Then a prayer will be accompanied by a song.

Most entertaining (to me, at least) was a remarkably early and hypocritical reference to our beloved Bourbon Trail in an advertisement for what appeared to be for a local passenger train.

Headlined "The Road to Hell," the ad included a message from S.R. Howser, general passenger agent.

"More young men purchase mileage over THE BOOZE ROUTE than all other lines combined," the ad says. "We don't use it ourselves, and advise you not to, but, if you will have it, then we will furnish you the best made, namely: Old Joe, Old Taylor, Old Prentice, Cedar Brook, J.P. Ripy, McKenna, Etc."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Court correct on same-sex marriage

To the editor:

I read with interest Editor Ben Carlson's column on the Supreme Court decision to allow gays to marry legally in last week's paper.

You have a libertarian, unusual opinion that the government should not be involved in the union of any two people — in other words, anyone should be able to marry anyone else without the benefit of a marriage license, or a legal permission slip, as you called it.

I do agree with you that politicians continue to make distractions for the public for their own personal gain. They trot out the same old game of smoke and mirrors with these hot-button issues — gay marriage, abortion and prayer in public schools. These same topics have been paraded and recycled in front of us by politicians pretending to be called to the alter, so that we are continually divided.

We're not working on the reality of climate change, for instance, in which case eventually we'll have poisoned the planet completely and all these points will be moot.

So let's imagine, for a moment, that government retreats from issuing any legal marriage licenses. We can get married in a church, or the backyard, by the preacher or by drunk Uncle Harry, because we don't need a license. What's to prevent us from marrying over and over again, without divorce, since the courts won't be able to be involved in that process, either? You didn't mention custody or child support, so that, I assume, would be decided by family members, or, how can I say this in a family newspaper — participants?

What could possibly go wrong?

No, I'm with the Supreme Court on this one. Judge Judy often reprimands feuding couples because they entered into a union "without the benefit of marriage." She uses that phrase for a reason - children, property and money can be dealt with by a (hopefully) fair court system born out of this lawful benefit. Women, especially, would be very vulnerable without it.

I believe that all people should have this benefit, no matter the sexual preference, because it is their constitutional and, therefore, their legal right. Religious preferences, including no religious preference, are also rights according to the Constitution, but they end at the feet of other citizens who are in their own pursuit of happiness; to love and legally marry the person of their choice.

More self-government needed

To the editor:

In his column last week, Editor Ben Carlson stated his opinion concerning the recent Supreme Court's decision on same-sex marriage.

I respect Ben's opinion. I only want to state my opinion about that decision. It seemed to me that the court affirmed equality between us all. I agree with the decision, and I believe we need self-government.

Now's the time to check plant health

Mother Nature sure has been generous with the rain. Of course, there are pros and cons to everything. The bugs have been snacking on my flowers big time, and every time I think about spraying a repellent or sulphur on the leaves, rain comes.

My roses are having a really tough time with both insects and black spot. If black spot is just beginning to show itself, spray with a mixture of 2 teaspoons of baking soda and 2 teaspoons of vegetable or horticultural oil in a gallon of water and spray the entire plant.

My vegetable plants are growing inches by the minute and I haven't had to turn on the hose for a while, but too much rain brings another set of issues. Excessive soaking after rain showers and storms can ruin plants' roots because the rain pushes out oxygen.

All parts of plants need oxygen to survive. Deep roots may be affected first, but shallow roots can also succumb to damage if wet weather continues. The rains cause leaching of nutrients from the soil, weakening a plants ability to grow and fight disease and pests. This means we have to add nutrients to the plants or soil to counter act the leaching.

If you have laid down mulch, then foliar spray fertilizers are the easiest and fastest working. If your soil is bare, then side dressing with a dry fertilizer is best, though it will take a little time to work its magic into the soil. Keep in mind, working wet soil is not a good thing. It compacts the soil, locking up nutrients.

This is the time of year to add calcium, via oyster or egg shells, around your tomato plants to fight blossom end rot. You can get oyster shells from farm stores. Potassium (the K in the N-P-K on a bag) is hugely important to help the plant fight disease. Wood ash and greensand are both organic forms of potassium you can use. Depending on your size of plant, start with a quarter cup greensand or a cup of ashes, and keep watch on the plant. Purplish leaves are an indicator of lack of calcium and/or potassium.

When the day comes that the soil is dry enough to work, you might consider putting in more beans, by direct seed, and tomato plants for a late harvest. It's also time to put those cabbage, broccoli and cauliflower plants in the ground for fall harvesting. I just wish our dry days would coincide with my days off.

Now, get out there and take a close look at the health of your plants. Remember that old adage, "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." Happy growing.

Know when to treat for pesky weevil

Yellow poplar weevils, also known as sassafras or magnolia weevils, are small black beetles that damage yellow poplar, sassafras, and magnolia. A distinct snout projecting from the front of the head occasionally causes them to be mistaken for ticks.

Feeding damage

Adults leave distinctive pockmark-type feeding pits in leaves that resemble curved rice grains in size and shape. Intense feeding may cause much of the leaf to turn brown. This insect occasionally becomes abundant enough to cause visible injury. In addition to damage done by adults, larvae feed as internal miners, causing areas of dead leaf tissue in poplar and sassafras leaves. Combined larval and adult activity can cause significant leaf loss. Healthy, established trees usually can tolerate the infrequent damage.

Insect life cycle

There is one generation of this insect each year. Adults pass winter in leaf litter and begin to feed on warm days in late April and May. Before bud break, weevils attack swelling buds and leave their distinctive feeding marks. As leaves unfold and enlarge, they, too, are fed upon. Holes in leaves (about an eighth of an inch in diameter) result from adult weevils puncturing buds or feeding on lower surfaces. Mating and egg laying occur in May and early June. Eggs are placed in midribs on undersides of leaves. This injury can break leaf midribs. Newly hatched larvae move from midribs into leaves where they feed as leaf miners. When ready to pupate, larvae move to inflated portions of the mines and spin silk cocoons.

New adults begin to emerge from leaves during the second week of June and feed on foliage. Sometimes they chew through leaves, but more often they remove only the lower epidermis and mesophyll, leaving the upper epidermis intact. This produces many chlorotic spots and results in the scorched appearance of severely attacked trees. Feeding by newly emerged weevils can be severe. Leaf drop occurs when damaged trees are also under drought stress. By mid-July adults have disappeared to their hiding places in leaf litter and will remain inactive until spring.

Management

Tree and shrub insecticides may be used to reduce damage to foliage. Treat when feeding damage is seen on about 10 percent of the branches and repeat as necessary. Weevils arrive on trees over an extended period of time; treating at the very first sign of damage may be premature and require an additional application in a few days. While the damage may be unsightly, injury to large, established trees in landscapes or wooded areas probably will not harm the trees.

I am convinced that there is no worse feeling than when your local gas station clerk looks at you with pity and informs you that your card was declined because you only have $2 left in your bank account.

I stood there dumbfounded, mentally calculating all my recent purchases. There was no way I could have spent that much money in two days.

I thank the cashier and go back outside to my car to check my bank balance on my

New shop offers 'Kentucky-centric' items

A passion for fashion and all things Kentucky led University of Kentucky marketing major Angel Yamraj into opening Bourbon Barrel Boutique in downtown Lawrenceburg.

"I always wanted to work in clothing," said Yamraj. "So when I was driving downtown one day and saw the building was for rent, I just thought I should go for it."

The 27-year-old said she felt Lawrenceburg has long lacked a place where you can find designer clothing and Kentucky-centric gifts.

"We are right in the middle of the Bourbon Trail but there is no place downtown for visitors to shop and buy gifts or eat while they are visiting the distilleries. It's a shame because Lawrenceburg can have a lot to offer."

Yamraj said she has partnered with Kentucky artisans and clothing designers such as Bluegrass Barrels and Kentucky For Kentucky, and even artists from Lawrenceburg to provide the best items possible from the Bluegrass State. "It is very important to me the items

Yamraj said she is excited to see an effort to revitalize downtown Lawrenceburg.

"I think the community will be really pleased at the opportunities that are coming downtown. A lot of new businesses are popping up," she said.

The 27-year-old said she plans to partner with neighbor Bluegrass Saber and provide weekly wine tastings where friends can visit downtown and relax while shopping.

"I also plan on giving teachers a discount when school starts back so they can come in and pick up some new blouses or outfits to work in," said Yamraj. "I am so excited and have so many ideas about what I can contribute to the community."

Yamraj says that while the boutique is open, she is planning a grand opening celebration in August.

"It's a very exciting time for Lawrenceburg," she said. "I just want people to embrace downtown and with all the new shops and restaurants coming in, I hope they do."

phone. Sure enough, $2. I scroll through the recent transactions and discover what I had feared the moment the clerk had alerted me of my new pauper status.

I'd been robbed.

Unfortunately, despite what my recent transactions stated, I had not signed up for an online dating service, purchased a new fishing vessel and was not currently in Brazil.

Someone was having a great vacation on my dime.

After calling my bank and informing them that I was not, in fact, looking for my soul mate while fishing in Brazil, I began to wonder how someone could have gotten that information.

Apparently thieves have gotten sneakier in their methods. Credit card skimmers are popping up in gas station pumps nationwide. Two were found at a gas station in Versailles recently. They had been there for about a month, completely undetected.

It is times like these when I remember why my mother has refused to jump aboard the plastic money train.

My mother has never had a debit card and refuses to get one.

I have seen her walk out of an establishment that didn't accept personal checks. The cashiers would roll their eyes at the little lady who was not keeping up with the times.

People used to tease her about not having one because it was faster than fumbling for cash or writing a check. People in line behind her have audibly groaned when she has whipped out her checkbook in line at the grocery store. She is old-fashioned and outdated. She was also right. My mother had warned me that reliance on computer accounting and digital transactions might come back to bite me. Boy, has it ever.

I still haven't found my fishing boat.

Cell company laying lines for enhanced service

By Ricki Barker
News staff

Those in rural Anderson County hoping the sight of crews laying fiber optic cable along US 62 meant the dawn of high speed internet are going to have to wait a little longer.

According to Barry Nothstine, director of marketing and product development for Bluegrass Cellular, Inc., the fiber optic cable installation is merely network enhancements for existing lines.

"I know it doesn't sound very glamorous, but it's less about expanding the network coverage and more about improving existing coverage," he said.

"We are creating a bigger pipe, if you will, to add more bandwidth and provide data for our customers that use those sites."

Nothstine said Bluegrass Cellular is not offering any new services, just making behind the scenes improvements to infrastructure.

However, Anderson County residents need not be downtrodden said Nothstine.

"We are currently building our 4G network outwards and constantly trying to improve," he explained. "While we aren't offering a new service in that area now, we might in the near future."

BIG ED SETTLES FOR PB&J

Ed Ruggles jokes with Commonwealth Credit Union employee Stephanie Pearler during CCU's recent Member Appreciation Day. Ruggles and his wife, Lee, were hoping to snack on one of the barbecue lunches the credit union was offering, unfortunately CCU ran out of the more than 300 sandwiches that were prepared for the event. Ruggles jokingly asked that it be reported that he was overly obnoxious and upset at the fact the barbecue had been whisked away by early birds, but appreciated that the peanut butter and jelly sandwiches were served crust-free.

Students participate in Barr's youth program

From staff reports
Congressman Andy Barr's Youth Ambassador Program has come to a close for the 2014-2015 academic year. Over 120 high school juniors and seniors from all 19 counties across the Sixth Congressional District participated in the leadership development program's inaugural year.

Local students participating included Chayse Abrams, a junior at Christian Academy of Lawrenceburg, and Hannah Wampler, a senior at Anderson County High School. The participants had the opportunity to travel to universities across the district including Transylvania University, Georgetown College, Eastern Kentucky University, and the University of Kentucky.

Students were able to learn from several renowned Kentucky leaders including former Gov. Martha Layne Collins, Central Bank CEO Luther Deaton, Host Communications founder and former Kentucky Secretary of Commerce Jim Host, and state Rep. Ryan Quarles, among many others.

During four sessions, students heard from leaders in the areas of government, education, military and business, students were given the opportunity to learn, develop leadership skills, further their political knowledge and interest, and network with other students from across the Sixth District.

Andy Barr said that "developing future leaders is vitally important. I enjoyed working with this bright group of young men and women and I look forward to the next academic year and the new array of students entering in the program."

CARLTON HONORED

Jerry Carlton, right, a lifelong resident of Anderson County, is presented with letters from state Sen. Julian Carroll and state Rep. James Tipton during a retirement ceremony following his 37 years of service with the Department of Library and Archives. Making the presentation is Anderson County Clerk Jason Denny. 'He is going to be missed,' says Denny. 'People say and write that all the time, so it is kind of a cliché, but it is the absolute truth within the program and the entire agency. He is the last of a team of archivists who guided the state archive into the modern era. It seems strange that he won't be around.'

Drury receives award from Midway College

From staff reports

Donna Crain Drury of Anderson County was presented the Ruth Slack Roach Memorial Award from Midway College's Alumni Association, according to a news release.

Drury was honored with the award June 6 at the Alumni Association's annual reunion on the Midway College campus.

The award was established in October 1995 in memory of Ruth Slack Roach, a long-time friend and supporter of the college. It is presented to an alumna who has demonstrated community leadership and service in the same spirit as Roach exemplified throughout her life, according to the news release.

Drury is a 1999 graduate of Midway College, where she was an honor student and graduated Cum Laude, when she earned her first college degree at age 46. She was also employed at Midway College for three years as the assistant director of admissions and financial aid.

During her tenure at the college, Drury mentored and assisted students in the Ruth Slack Roach Leadership-Scholarship Program, as well as female students involved with the college's student ambassador program.

Drury is pursuing a master's degree in executive leadership and human relations from Liberty University, according to the news release.

Drury is involved in community service and charity work. She founded and directs a community and charitable group called "Helping Hands—Heart of Community" that raises funds and community awareness for the needs of those less fortunate.

She is developing and leading an anti-bullying program, "Back Up Bully!" for students of all ages, as well as parents/caregivers. The program will begin in October 2015 in Anderson County, according to the release.

Drury also serves on numerous local community boards including the Agency for Substance Abuse Prevention (ASAP), Community of Promise Board, United Way of the Bluegrass Board of Directors, and the Adult Community Education Advisory Council. She also serves on the Anderson County Board of Education.

Snow, portrayed by Kinley Drake, falls under the sleeping curse after biting into a poisoned apple during the rehearsals of the Anderson County Community Theatre's new play 'Snow White'. The play was written by local director Catherine Partlow and weaves together the many different stories of Snow White.

Snow White, as you've never seen her before

Partlow creates adaptation of beloved story

Ricki Barker

The Anderson County Community Theatre's presentation of Snow White is a true labor of love for the entire cast and crew, but especially for director Catherine Partlow, who wrote the play and designed all the costumes herself.

While a veteran director, this is Partlow's first foray into the writing world and said the inspiration for her rendition of Snow White came from her dissatisfaction with the current accepted storyline.

"I always wanted to know what made the evil queen so evil and why she didn't try several times to get rid of Snow White," said said. "In the Disney version, the huntsman fails to get Snow's heart so she creates the poison apple and that's it. I always thought the queen would be a little more determined."

Partlow said she read the original Grimm's Fairy Tale version of the story and realized there could be more to the story.

"The more I read, the more the story grew," Partlow explained. "The mirror takes on a larger role in my version as well."

Desiree Douglas, who portrays the mirror in Snow

From right, Kinley Drake who portrays Snow White and Genevieve Nickens who plays Young Snow pose with a poison apple during rehearsals.

White, said the role is often neglected in the many stories of Snow White, but Partlow has literally fleshed out the character and given it more meaning.

"Katherine explained to me that the mirror is what drives Sebrinetha, the evil queen, it is where she gets her magic from. It is really the mirror that is using the queen as her puppet. In a way the mirror is trying to make the queen more evil than she really is."

Partlow said she liked the idea that the mirror is attempting to reflect evil onto Sebrinetha by preying on the young queen's weaknesses.

Mary Myles, who portrays Sebrinetha, said she originally auditioned to be Snow White but was delighted to find out she had been cast as the evil queen.

"I just love her," she said. "She is so sinister."

Kinley Drake, who portrays Snow White, said this is her first time in a community play and the character of Snow in Partlow's play is not the damsel in distress in most other adaptations.

"She is still sweet and kind, but she also has a lot of bravery," said the 14-year-old.

Along with the actor's handmade costumes, the audience will see one of the most elaborate sets the community theatre has ever created.

"It is really awesome," said Douglas. "People are going to love it. With all the special effects and lighting it's going to be great."

Audience members will also notice the chemistry between the actors on stage which, according to the cast, requires very little acting as more than half of the cast members are related in real life.

"We are putting on a family-friendly play so why not have family members in the cast," Douglas said. "We have several sets of brothers and sisters and parents and children involved. Like, Snow White's brother is a dwarf and the prince's sister is Sebrinetha."

Partlow said that while she has worn many hats for this production as writer, director, costume and set designer, she feels the community will enjoy this version of Snow White and the hard work she has put into it.

"I think people will come in thinking they know the story and come away with something a little more," she said.

Isaacs to pack 'em in Friday at Sand Spring Baptist

World-renowned group returns to Lawrenceburg

By John Herndon
News staff

One of the biggest names in Nashville will be performing Friday night, July 10, at Sand Spring Baptist Church.

The Isaacs, a world-renowned acoustic group, will be the headliner as part of the Sand Spring Gospel Concert series. Also performing will be The Shireys, another family group that has become a local favorite at Sand Spring.

The program begins at 7 p.m. There is no admission charge but a love offering will be taken.

The Isaacs have been traveling in full-time ministry since 1986, according to Lily Isaacs, who along with her three children - Becky, Sonya and Ben - make up the group that has won numerous Dove Awards from the Gospel Music Association. The Isaacs have also been nominated for several Grammys.

The Isaacs strive to bring a message of hope based on their own life experiences, Lily Isaacs said in an email. She was born in Germany to Polish Jewish survivors of the Holocaust, but the family moved to New York when she was 2 years old. At age 35, she was diagnosed with breast cancer but beat the dreaded disease.

"I certainly hope that our ministry is an experience of hope," she said. "Through all of our personal trials and victories, we've tried to incorporate this message in song and testimony. Of course, this includes my history with my parents as Holocaust survivors and my battle with cancer."

Lily Isaacs is now a 31-year cancer survivor and her fight was the inspiration for perhaps the group's best-known song, "I'm Gonna Love You Through It." Written by Sonya Isaacs, her husband, Jimmy Yeary, and Ben Hay-slip, the song was a major hit for country music superstar Martina McBride. The Isaacs perform the song extensively.

When the idea for the song came about, Lily Isaacs says, "They called me and asked some very personal and soul-searching questions. The next day, (Sonya) sang the song to me. I was deeply moved and I know the song has been a great blessing to millions of people world-wide."

The words to the chorus say,

*When you're weak, I'll be strong
When you let go, I'll hold on
When you need to cry, I swear that I'll be there to dry your eyes
When you feel lost and scared to death,
Like you can't take one more step
Just take my hand, together we can do it
I'm gonna love you through it.*

While "I'm Gonna Love You Through It" is perhaps the most popular song to originate with The Isaacs to make it big, it is almost impossible to put the group in any one category. Their repertoire includes country and bluegrass, and the Isaacs often appear at the Grand Ole Opry. The group is also known for its work in the gospel music industry and is a regular feature on the Bill Gaither Homecoming series. The concert schedule is loaded heavily with appearances in churches.

"I'm not sure we can be labeled as bluegrass or country or gospel, only," Lily Isaacs says. "We actually are more Americana, in my opinion. We've had many opportunities to perform in many different genres. I feel like this happens because we are not concerned about being categorized. We just write songs and arrange them the best way they sound. Our family writes songs about real life issues and that's gospel music to me."

This week's schedule underscores her assessment. Sunday, the group was to have played at the Brooklyn Tabernacle in New York. Thursday, the Isaacs are scheduled to play at the Bill Monroe Memorial Park in Bean Blossom, Indiana, before heading to Lawrenceburg on Friday.

The music is full of variety, from "I'm Gonna Love You Through It" to a spine-tingling version of the old hymn, "I Must Tell Jesus" to the bluegrass standard, "Daniel Prayed," to a fun adaptation of the Bing Crosby-Andrews Sisters hit from 1944, "Accentuate the Positive."

Recently, the group was asked to sing at the funeral for country star Jim Ed

Brown.

"We befriended Jim Ed Brown by being on the Opry over the past 20 years," Lily Isaacs said. "He was a wonderful person and good friend. When the family requested that we sing at his funeral, we were humbled. We recorded (Brown's hit) 'The Three Bells' on our 'Naturally' CD, and have had the opportunity to sing this song with him on the Opry stage several times."

The Isaacs last appeared in Lawrenceburg when they packed the house at Sand Spring last January.

Another full house is expected Friday.

"We always enjoy coming to Lawrenceburg, Kentucky," she said. "We hope to have a wonderful time of praising God and enjoying fellowship."

Owners get vehicles out of defunct body shop

By Ben Carlson
News staff

Penny Tillett, along with about a half dozen other people, just wanted their vehicles back last Wednesday morning when police were called to an auto body shop on Glensboro Road, located in what was Southern States. Tillett took her 2015 Jeep Patriot to Craig Fraine's Body Shop just before Memorial Day when it was damaged in a wreck. For two months she said she tried to be patient with Fraine, but her patience ran out last weekend. "He wouldn't return my calls and, when he did, it was just one sob story after the next," Tillett said. "On Saturday, he said he couldn't get the garage door open."

Tillett got her vehicle back when the Anderson County Sheriff's Office and building owner, Brad Smith, opened the building and allowed vehicle owners to retrieve their property.

"We worked hard with local law enforcement to make sure people got their property returned to them," Smith said. "That's what was most important."

Tillett said she didn't give any money to Fraine, but others, police said, did.

"My insurance is taking care of it," Tillett said, "but he would never even send in an estimate."

Fraine could not be reached for comment. The phone number listed on the sign in front of the business was temporarily disconnected as of Monday afternoon.

Once the vehicles were removed, workers were seen loading a variety of equipment into trucks and moving it to storage.

The business did not appear to be open as of Monday.

Man who served 10 years for DUI manslaughter charged again

From staff reports

It might have seemed that every police officer in Kentucky was participating in last Monday's funeral for a fallen state trooper, but there were still enough left on duty to corral a man who allegedly fled following a traffic stop.

William Daniel Drummond, 41, of 1034 Wildcat Road, was charged with DUI, operating on a suspended license, possession of drug paraphernalia and fleeing from police both behind the wheel and on foot when Lawrenceburg police pulled him over near Hilltop Drive.

Drummond, who court records show has a lengthy history of DUI and other criminal charges, was released from prison last July after being sentenced to 10 years on a manslaughter charge from an incident in Spencer County, according to online court records.

Last Monday, officer Jason Peyton of the Lawrenceburg Police Department attempted to pull Drummond over for failure to use his turn signal when, according to Peyton's report, Drummond took off onto Bluebird Court.

The report says that Drummond then abandoned his 1999 Dodge pickup truck and took off on foot, running through back yards.

The report says that Drummond was eventually captured in a back yard on Fairview, and that drug paraphernalia was found in his vehicle.

He was transported to the Shelby County Detention Center.

Enjoy day at the beach right here at home

I just spent seven days in one of my favorite places on earth, the beach. I have always been a lover of sun and water but the older I get I appreciate fresh seafood more and more.

Besides building sand castles, riding boogie boards and waking up early with my little ones to watch the sun rise over the ocean, one of my favorite things to do is to go to the fish market every day and get their latest catch.

Ciara Hyatt

This year, one of the meals I enjoyed the most was our Mexican fiesta on the bay, complete with grilled shrimp and chicken fajitas, home-made salsa and guacamole, refried beans and rice and a couple margaritas to finish it off.

You don't have to go to the ocean to enjoy a meal like this, just go to the local grocery store and get all the fix-ins and put on a party right in your backyard!

Fajita ingredients:
1 1/2- 2 lbs shrimp- peeled and deveined (you can also do chicken or flank steak)

1 onion- sliced
3 tri-colored bell pepper- sliced
2 tbsp canola oil

Marinade recipe:
1/2 cup vegetable oil
Juice of 1 lime
2 tsp cumin
2 tsp garlic
1 tsp salt
1/2 bunch of cilantro- chopped
1/4 jalapeño- diced

Extras and toppings:
Corn and/or flour tortillas
Sour cream
Cilantro
Salsa
Limes
Guacamole

(Grilled jalapeños- if you're brave)

Instructions:
Whisk marinade together and add meat. Cover and set in fridge for an hour. Heat 2 tbsp canola in skillet over medium night heat. Cook meat until done. Remove from skillet and cover with foil. In same skillet, add onions and peppers, cook until tender. Then then add meat back to skillet to warm everything up again. Heat tortillas for 30 seconds in microwave and wrap in foil to keep warm. Serve with refried beans, rice and a good margarita!

Margarita recipe:
Ice cubes

3 oz of good tequila
2 oz freshly squeezed lime juice
1 oz simple syrup (recipe follows)
1 tsp orange liqueur
Margarita salt

Simple syrup:
1 cup sugar
1 cup water

Directions
Fill a cocktail shaker with ice. Add tequila, lime juice, Simple syrup and orange liqueur. Cover and shake until mixed and chilled, about 30 seconds. Pour some margarita salt on a plate. Press the rim of a chilled glass into the mixture to rim the edge. Strain margarita into the glass. Enjoy.

Here's a letter to the millennial generation

Dear young Christians of today,
On behalf of my generation and our helicopter parenting, over-board praising for tying your shoes and giving every one of you a trophy just for showing up, I am truly sorry.

Recently, Anthony Bradley wrote a story in World magazine titled, "The 'New Legalism,'" in which he asserted that the push for Christians, especially all y'all young people, to be "radical" and "missional" is actually discouraging "ordinary people in ordinary places from doing ordinary things for the glory of God."

By "radical" and "missional" Bradley means living a life like Shane Claiborne who has shunned a suburban lifestyle to become poor and make his home among the poor in inner city Philadelphia, living in community with them and struggling as they struggle.

It seems since from before you were born we, your parents, grandparents, aunts and uncles, have been telling you how very extraordinary you are.

However, Bradley thinks we've done you a disservice and that our heaps o' praise have had the opposite effect on you in that now you think you have to be awesome and amazing like Shane Claiborne, or at least well above average and best at everything you think, say, believe, do and attempt, and that that's putting stress on you.

Bradley wrote that the call to be radical and missional — living big and bold for Jesus to the point of sacrificing your own comfort and ease in order to identify with the poor and needy — is making you sad.

He went on to say, "Today's millennial generation is being fed the message that if they don't do something special and extraordinary in this life they are wasting their gifts and potential."

Ordinary isn't an option, or so Bradley says you believe. Ordinary is the same as failure to a generation with boxes full of trophies and ribbons stored under their beds.

It's my generation's fault you think this way, and for that I apologize.

However, I'm not sure Bradley is correct in calling this push for you to live big and bold radical and missional lives for Jesus "legalism." It is if you pursue it out of guilt or shame or from a drive to find your sense of worth and meaning in it.

It is if you think we, your parents and grandparents, aunts and uncles, expect this of you.

It is if you think God will love you only if you do.

Jesus calls every one of his followers to live radically and missionally in that he tells us to deny ourselves, pick up our cross and follow him (Luke 9:23), to love our enemies, forgive those who sin against us, to be sexually chaste, to live lives free from greed and filled with empathy, sympathy and compassion.

I think the point that Bradley was trying to make, and in this I agree: Doing great things for God may not and most likely doesn't mean being grand and awesome. Being great in God's kingdom involves being least and being faithful in the small things.

God may not call you to pastor a megachurch, sell a billion books or songs, build a school for orphans or start a revolution.

He may call you to marry and stay married to one spouse, raise average children the best you can, work at a job with little recognition or fame, live in relative obscurity — and find contentment in all of that.

The radical life is found in resting in the knowledge that whatever life God calls you to, there are no greener pastures, there is no higher thing, no better or more awesome place for you.

So, as you go out into the world and seek to find your place, remember that God calls you to his best for you.

GOD AND HOMOSEXUALITY

Lev. 18:22. "You shall not lie with a male as one lies with a female; it is an abomination."

Lev. 20:13. "If there is a man who lies with a male as those who lie with a woman, both of them have committed a detestable act; they shall surely be put to death. Their bloodguiltiness is upon them"

1 Cor. 6:9-10. "Or do you not know that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Do not be deceived; neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor homosexuals, nor thieves, nor the covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor swindlers, shall inherit the kingdom of God."

Rom. 1:26-28. "For this reason God gave them over to degrading passions; for their women exchanged the natural function for that which is unnatural, and in the same way also the men abandoned the natural function of the woman and burned in their desire toward one another, men with men committing indecent acts and receiving in their own persons the due penalty of their error. And just as they did not see fit to acknowledge God any longer, God gave them over to a depraved mind, to do those things which are not proper."

The Bible condemns homosexuality and says they cannot enter heaven. That doesn't mean that anyone HATES those who practice homosexuality anymore than one HATES a liar, thief or fornicator. We all need to repent and stop sinful practices.

One can practice homosexuality, but not with the approval of God or faithful Christians.

Get your news to The News

The Anderson News is often asked how to get sports news, photos and information in the paper for publication.

The process is easy. You can send information and photos via our website, www.theandersonnews.com or e-mail sports editor John Herndon at jpherndon@theandersonnews.com.

Be sure to include a phone number or e-mail address where we can reach you if necessary. The deadline is 8 a.m. Monday.

We also want your schedules. Our one-person sports department obviously can't be everywhere, but we won't be able to consider covering your events without schedules. This is especially true of non-varsity sports and youth sports.

Trail cameras are windows into the woods

By Kevin Kelly

Ky. Dept. of Fish & Wildlife Resources

A few paces inside a tree line that borders an open field thick with chest-high grass lies a tangle of narrow, sun-dappled game trails just a stone's throw from the Kentucky River below.

Bo Spencer knows deer, turkey, raccoon and the occasional bobcat travel these thoroughfares because a trail camera he set up to photograph the spot has captured images of them.

He's returned this morning to swap out the SD card, replace the batteries and see that the unit is operating properly before moving on to do the same with trail cameras deployed elsewhere on his family's central Kentucky farm.

"You can't spend 24 hours a day in the woods when you work and have family obligations but the camera can," said Spencer, an information specialist with the Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources. "You can see what's there that you don't get to see."

Trail cameras have evolved from somewhat of a novelty to one of the most sophisticated and useful tools available to hunters, landowners and wildlife biologists. Biologists use them for research purposes and to derive density estimates.

For hunters, setting trail cameras out now can pay dividends when the approaching hunting seasons open later this summer and fall.

"Your camera can scout when you can't," said Spencer, an avid deer and turkey hunter who makes his own turkey calls. "Whether it's a big deer, turkey or another species that you're looking for, you can find out where it's at. Right now, deer are holding to a summer pattern. You can kind of gear up in preparation for the early archery season."

The summer pattern for deer is characterized by limited movement. Therefore, areas near food sources and along travel corridors leading to and from those areas should be a focus.

"Bucks aren't spending a lot of time on their feet. They feed at night or around sunrise and sunset and bed during the day," said Gabe Jenkins, deer and elk program coordinator for Kentucky Fish and Wildlife. "Your female deer are going to move more because they're feeding fawns. Their nutrient intake needs to be higher, so they'll move a little more."

Bo Spencer, information specialist for the Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources, adjusts a trail camera on his family farm in Anderson County. Trail cameras give hunters an idea of the game animals living in a particular area while minimizing human disturbance.

"The pattern really changes right about the time our archery season opens in early September."

Setting a trail camera in an easy-to-access location minimizes disturbance to the area. Patience can limit pressure felt by the animals. Spencer generally waits one to two weeks before checking a trail camera.

"If I've got one around water that can fluctuate up and down if we get a rain, I'll go move it up, take it down, whatever I need to do to make sure it doesn't wash away or get swamped," he said.

The right mounting height for a trail camera may depend on the species of animal most likely to be encountered as well as the surrounding vegetation. Wind-blown tall grass or leaves can trip a camera, eating up memory and diminishing battery life.

In general, 36 to 48 inches off the ground is a good rule of thumb. Hunters may want to place their trail cameras higher to get them out of an animal's sight line and above vegetation or if there are concerns about security.

Where the camera is pointed can make a big difference in image quality. Position the camera so the lens isn't pointed directly in the direction of the rising or setting sun. Direct sunlight can cause "lens flare" and reduce image quality. Angling the lens downward can safeguard against this effect.

Batteries are the lifeblood of the trail camera. Spencer doesn't skimp. He prefers name-brand alkaline batteries.

The newest trail cameras take high-resolution photos and high-definition video. Some models can wirelessly text photos to mobile phones or email accounts. Those photos may be stamped with the date and time but also the temperature, barometric pressure and moon phase.

Spencer considers three primary things when choosing a trail camera: ease of use, quality of the pictures and features. He prefers at least an 8 megapixel camera paired with a 4 gigabyte SD memory card.

"You don't have to break the bank but you do want to weigh the options and get one that's going to have really good picture quality," Spencer said. "You could buy an inexpensive trail camera but you may not get a good array of features or good battery life or quality pictures."

Spencer uses three types of trail cameras that vary in cost.

"Mostly, I have infrared cameras because they're often the most affordable," he said. "A lot of times, people use black flash cameras in high-traffic areas where they're trying to hide them from people. White flash cameras are going to produce good night pictures. I really like to use my white flash camera in the fall and winter to take pictures of predators at night. They also work well for deer over a mineral site. The infrared pictures get the black and white at night but can have a limited flash range."

Take time to read the owner's manual and familiarize yourself with the trail camera's features and functions. In turn, it will reward you with beautiful images and valuable insight into the land and the animals on it.

Pete is still part of the Cincy All-Star Game story

Soap opera has run its long and weary course

Baseball's best will be coming to Cincinnati next week.

The all-star game returns to Cincy for the first time since 1988 when the Reds were still at Riverfront Stadium, Schottzie was running the team and Jerry Springer was still in town.

Those, my friend, were the days.

Next Tuesday, it will be the National League All-Stars hosting the Kansas City Royals - well, almost - in the mid-summer classic. It is only the third time in my lifetime the All-Star game will be played on the banks of the Ohio River. In addition to this year and 1988, the best of the bigs descended on the newly-christened Riverfront Stadium in 1970.

It's kind of ironic how Pete Rose ties those three All-Star Games together. He dominated the post-game talk in '70 and now dominates the pregame discussion 45 years later. In between, he was managing the Reds to a fourth consecutive second-place finish in the National League West.

Back in 1970, if you remember, Rose scored from second base in the bottom of the 12th inning to give the National League a 5-4 win over the American League. He raced around third base, then bowled over Cleveland catcher Ray Fosse for the winning run.

At the time, Fosse was considered by some to be close to Johnny Bench as the best catcher in the game. I know, it seems silly today, but Fosse really was that good.

He was great until Pete ran over him.

It seems kind of ironic today that so many see Pete Rose as the guy that Major League Baseball has run over. Twenty-five years ago, or just a season after the last time the Reds hosted the All-Star Game, Pete was removed as manager of the Reds and permanently banned from baseball, meaning that his 4,256 major league hits are not enough to get him to the Hall of Fame.

But from this corner, it's not that Major League Baseball has run over Pete Rose as much as Pete ran over himself.

For 20 years, I went back and forth on whether Pete Rose should be in the Hall of Fame. Some say it is a no-brainer that he should be, but I am not convinced.

There's little doubt that having more hits, playing in more games and hitting more singles than anyone in history should put one in the Hall of Fame in most instances. And there can be little doubt that Pete Rose was the sparkplug for the Big Red Machine, which dominated the National League from 1970-76.

But the pertinent question is whether Pete bet on the game while he was playing or managing? That is the cardinal sin in any major league sport and that is known to anyone who plays in the leagues. We can hash and rehash all the tired old arguments, but they do no good.

Does Pete Rose have the records to get in the Hall of Fame?

No question. If someone disagrees, then I wonder what you would have as his standard.

However, do I care anymore?

Nope.

Repeat, I don't care if Pete Rose is in the Hall of Fame or not.

He was a great hitter, one of the best switch-hitters of all time. He played with the passion that Ray Fosse experienced, a passion for the game that was so intense that Pete was quoted as saying, "I would walk through Hell in a gasoline suit to play baseball."

But what was once a tragic and pathetic story of someone not able to confront or control his weaknesses has become a sideshow to my favorite sport. Just recently, ESPN ran a report that Pete bet on games as a player from 1984-86.

To be sure, Pete has said time and again he is sorry for what he did to be banned from the game, but it usually comes across as shallow. He might be sincere, for all I know.

What I do know is the trust just is not there anymore.

To be also sure, Major League Baseball uses Pete to its advantage, from parading him out with the All-Century Team in 1999 to giving him a limited role in some major events. It looks like MLB really has run over Pete.

But ultimately, Pete did most of the damage to himself.

And, really, I have just grown weary of the soap opera.

I no longer care whether he's in the Hall of Fame or not.

HOROSCOPES

Clean-up time, Capricorn. You may not have made the mess, but you will most certainly have to clean it up in order to move forward. A pal helps.

Darn, Aries. Just when you think you've got a handle on things at work, you're given new responsibilities. Delegation is key. A friend gets frank with you.

Judge not, Cancer. You were young once, too. Blame less and guide more. A document reappears in the most unexpected of places. Ask questions later.

Lady luck smiles on you, and you win big. Enjoy, Libra. A run-in with an old acquaintance uncovers an amazing opportunity. Go for it!

Money is always a worry, even with savings and small windfalls. Surely there is a better way, Aquarius. Look to a longtime mentor for the answer.

Perfection is highly desired but rarely attained. Do your best, reach for the stars, but don't be disappointed if you fall short. It happens, Taurus, more than you realize.

Lunatic you are not, Leo, but your behavior this week may make some wonder. Some risks are worth taking. It is as simple as that!

Too much, too little. There has to be a happy medium. Look for it, Scorpio. A film inspires introspection and meditation. Ah-ha You've got it now.

Face the facts, Pisces. What someone thinks and says are two different things. They could very well be trying to pull the wool over your eyes.

Competition is heating up at home. Bring it on, Gemini! A neighbor drops by for a few too many visits. Make yourself scarce and give them the hint.

The fog lifts at home, and progress is made. Hooray, Virgo. A crass remark from a friend reveals the need to consult a professional.

Presto, Sagittarius. You see, you do, and you conquer. It's quick, simple and painless. Health and fitness goals are revamped. Go, go, go!
